

HUMAN ECOLOGY & EVERYDAY LIFE (HEE4)

ONLINE COHORT PROGRAM

SEPTEMBER 2017

APPLY BY MARCH 31

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Increase your qualifications in home economics education and enhance your ability to conduct useful teaching and learning activities.

This M.Ed. in Home Economics with a focus on Human Ecology and Everyday Life is a unique graduate program, offered fully online, for teachers of home economics, human ecology, family studies, and family and consumer science.

It will also be of interest to professionals involved in educational programs that focus on health and nutrition, the environment and sustainability, and related projects such as school gardens. The online learning environment makes it accessible anywhere in the world.

Its underlying themes include interdisciplinary inquiry, human-environment interactions, local and global communities, ecological sustainability, researching practice, and social responsibility.

As a participant, you will have an opportunity to increase your qualifications in home economics education and enhance your ability to conduct useful teaching and learning activities programs based on ecology and issues of daily life.
