PROGRAM OVERVIEW

INSTRUCTOR: GINA WONG

This is a five-day intensive course that explores BC's New Curriculum. Educators in contemporary learning environments are exploring how to integrate the core competencies, big ideas and learning standards in authentic and meaningful ways across all curricular areas.

The course will involve active participation, guest speakers, and video presentations. Participants will be involved in teacher inquiry and critical reflection to discover, articulate and explore the interconnections between theory and practice.

- What are possible pedagogical approaches that support teacher and student learning in the new curriculum?
- How can learning be made visible and communicated? What might assessment look like in the new curriculum?
- How can the issues that arise from the implementation of the new curriculum be addressed?
- What are the benefits of the new curriculum?

Currently the District Literacy and Assessment Teacher for the Vancouver School District, Gina's career in education spans over 27 years. Gina is a passionate and dedicated educator who facilitates learning not only when teaching children in the classroom, but also when working with adults in professional learning communities. She continues to facilitate numerous collaborative teacher inquiry groups in literacy, technology, arts and early learning. She has published articles on the impact of technology in learning and the inquiry process in professional learning. In addition, Gina has worked as an instructor and mentor in more than 10 Graduate Field Programs and as a faculty associate in the Professional Development Program in the Faculty of Education at Simon Fraser University. She regularly presents workshops in the areas of literacy, early intervention, early learning, Reggio-inspired approach and assessment. Gina was awarded the Prime Minister's Certificate of Achievement in 2012 and the Prime Minister's Certificate of Excellence in 2013.
